

Welcome to my website, this week I have been leading for Labour in a debate on firearms. There is a strong consensus in parliament on the need to review and update legislation in this area and I have been arguing that the UK Government should consider further restrictions on the possession of airguns or even a ban.

My consultation on better regulation of property factors has now ended and I am grateful to the many constituents who took the time to send me their comments. There were some real horror stories amongst the many responses I received and I am clear that more needs to be done to protect ordinary owners and residents from problems such as unfair and confusing charges.

As part of trade union week in the Parliament I also participated in a session on Corporate Killing about demands for stronger laws on prosecution of companies who are negligent in their health and safety responsibilities and I also found myself on the BBC after a cable snapped on the Squinty Bridge at Finnieston, hopefully the testing going on now will give the bridge the all clear to reopen soon.

Thanks for stopping by.
